The population is at high risk for Alzheimer’s, yet not enough is known about how their brain ages.

By Hector M. González

The number of Latinos with Alzheimer’s disease is projected to nearly triple by 2050. The significant increase in the number of persons diagnosed with Alzheimer’s disease is a looming public health crisis for many communities who will have to care for this crisis — both as patients and as families.

According to the Alzheimer’s Association, Latino populations are disproportionately affected by Alzheimer’s disease and related dementias. This is largely due to the intersection of ethnicity and socioeconomic factors. Latinos are likely to be most affected by this disease, but African Americans and other communities who will care for this crisis — both as patients and as families — will also be significantly impacted.

It’s hard to imagine a candidate less able to win working-class votes than New York’s former mayor.

By Harold Meyerson

Mr. de Blasio’s political career has not been marked by any great idealism, but it has been defined by pragmatism and a certain moral sensibility. He has shown himself to be a leader who is not afraid to speak out against injustice, even if it means criticizing those in power.

The normally fractious Democratic Party is now in disarray, with Bernie Sanders’ campaign stirring up the base and his supporters accusing Joe Biden of being too moderate. Bloomberg has been a consistent force in the Democratic Party, and his support for Biden could help to unite the party.

The normally fractious Democratic Party is now in disarray, with Bernie Sanders’ campaign stirring up the base and his supporters accusing Joe Biden of being too moderate. Bloomberg has been a consistent force in the Democratic Party, and his support for Biden could help to unite the party.

Pay Sacramento’s army of interns

THERE ARE DEEP AND WIDESPREAD misunderstandings about Bloomberg’s interest in China. He has always supported the Chinese regime. He is a capitalist who supports the Chinese regime. He is a supporter of the Chinese regime.

THERE ARE DEEP AND WIDESPREAD misunderstandings about Bloomberg’s interest in China. He has always supported the Chinese regime. He is a capitalist who supports the Chinese regime. He is a supporter of the Chinese regime.

Michael Bloomberg’s show-time in China has earned him admiration from many international leaders, who believe he has the potential to be a leader in the global community. Bloomberg’s leadership style is characterized by his ability to bring together diverse perspectives and his commitment to ethical and responsible governance.

Michael Bloomberg’s show-time in China has earned him admiration from many international leaders, who believe he has the potential to be a leader in the global community. Bloomberg’s leadership style is characterized by his ability to bring together diverse perspectives and his commitment to ethical and responsible governance.